POLYMER MODIFIED BITUMEN: LABORATORY EVALUATION, CONSTRUCTION GUIDELINES AND FIELD EXPERIENCE ABSTRACT The abundance of asphalt compatible polymers now available makes it possible to improve almost every aspect of paving. It is crucial, however, that the various physical characteristics, construction

Polymer Modified Bitumen: Laboratory Evaluation

Multigrade Bitumen: Multigrade bitumen is a chemically modified bitumen that has the properties of a hard paving grade bitumen at high service temperatures coupled with the properties of a soft paving grade bitumen at low temperatures (i.e. it has properties that span multiple grades).

the polymer modifier. The ageing properties of polymer modified bitumen, PMB, have the main role in quality of PMB dispersions and solid PMB. In road applications, BIT and PMB dispersions are exposed to thermooxidative ageing in production of PMB dis-persions, during their storage, mixing and transporting. The improve bitumen properties to some extent, there are still some drawbacks limiting the future development of bitumen polymer modification, such as high cost, low ageing resistance and poor storage stability of polymer modified bitumen (PMB). Researchers attempted various ways to remove these drawbacks.

This is in fact not a bitumen, but a polymer plastif-ied by the oils in the bitumen in which the heavier fractions of the initial asphalt cement are dispersed. In this case, the polymer is the continuous phase and the asphalt is therein dispersed. The properties of such a system are fundament-ally different to those of a bitumen, and depend ...

by different polymers. Again the polymer modified bitumens show improved elasticity, particularly at the temperatures exceeding about 20°C. The reason is that above this temperature, the viscosity of the bitumen is low enough to allow the elastic network of the polymer to affect the mechanical properties of the modified binders.
